MEDIA RELEASE

21 March 2014

The INSLM is the wrong target

Prime Minister Abbott's recent move to abolish the Independent National Security Legislation Monitor (INSLM) would see the end of an invaluable function in reporting on national security legislation.

If the Government intend addressing the pointless proliferation of excess regulation, they should be attacking the array of draconian and wholly unnecessary counter-terrorism laws that have eroded basic rights, for which task the Monitor's balanced and expert input would be invaluable.

The Australian Privacy Foundation (APF), Australia's leading civil society organisation concerned with privacy, decries the failure of the current and preceding governments to respond to numerous sensible and moderate recommendations by the INSLM.

We echo Brett Walker SC's sentiment: "The functions of the INSLM go no further than review, report and recommend". But when recommendations are ignored, "scepticism may start to take root about the political imperative to have the most effective and appropriate counter-terrorism laws", which ultimately undermines the trust that is fundamental to civil society.

The APF calls on Parliament to strengthen rather than abolish the INSLM, and we commend Brett Walker SC for his cogent and independent analysis of the NSL in accord with the finest tradition of the Australian legal profession.

Background Information

The Australian Privacy Foundation (APF) is the primary national association dedicated to protecting the privacy rights of Australians. The Foundation aims to focus public attention on emerging issues that pose a threat to the freedom and privacy of Australians. The Foundation has led the fight to defend the right of individuals to control their personal information and to be free of excessive intrusions.

The APF's primary activity is analysis of the privacy impact of systems and proposals for new systems. It makes frequent submissions to parliamentary committees and government agencies. It publishes information on privacy laws and privacy issues. It provides continual background briefings to the media on privacy-related matters.

Where possible, the APF cooperates with and supports privacy oversight agencies, but it is entirely independent of the agencies that administer privacy legislation, and regrettably often finds it necessary to be critical of their performance.

When necessary, the APF conducts campaigns for or against specific proposals. It works with civil liberties councils, consumer organisations, professional associations and other community groups as appropriate to the circumstances. The Privacy Foundation is also an active participant in Privacy International, the world-wide privacy protection network.

The APF is open to membership by individuals and organisations who support the APF's Objects. Funding that is provided by members and donors is used to run the Foundation and to support its activities including research, campaigns and awards events.

The APF does not claim any right to formally represent the public as a whole, nor to formally represent any particular population segment, and it accordingly makes no public declarations about its membership-base. The APF's contributions to policy are based on the expertise of the members of its Board, SubCommittees and Reference Groups, and its impact reflects the quality of the evidence, analysis and arguments that its contributions contain.

The APF's Board, SubCommittees and Reference Groups comprise professionals who bring to their work deep experience in privacy, information technology and the law.

The Board is supported by Patrons The Hon Michael Kirby AC CMG and The Hon Elizabeth Evatt AC, and an Advisory Panel of eminent citizens, including former judges, former Ministers of the Crown, and a former Prime Minister.
